

GOLF PRACTICE PUTTING DEVICE AND METHODOLOGYABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A device for golf putting practice includes a relatively thin elongate member with a longitudinal centerline for alignment with the center of the putter head during a stroke, a head end and a back end; means for positioning a golf ball at the head end so that the center of the golf ball is in alignment with the centerline; a hole adjacent to the back end for receiving a golf tee; and one or more horizontal lines perpendicular to the centerline for squaring the putter.